Raising the Bar is AWIB's annual forum on Asian women in the legal profession.

For our sixth annual event, we will address how the path to a successful legal career has changed and choices are broader and more numerous than ever before. Working in government or at a non-profit organization can lead to private sector opportunities and working at a law firm could lead to a partnership track, but can also be a springboard to more exciting work .

Our featured panel of powerful Asian women attorneys have worked in both the public and private sectors and have thrived. They will discuss their adjustment going from one sector to another and how their diverse experiences have impacted their personal and professional lives.
